The Interfaith Alliance to Congress: Legislate Against Hate by ’08

Rev. Gaddy leads effort to enact Hate Crimes Bill, counter radical right’s misinformation campaign

By Preetmohan Singh,
Deputy Director of Public Policy
psingh@interfaithalliance.org

Thanks to the activism of thousands of The Interfaith Alliance (TIA) members like you, a bipartisan majority in the U.S. House of Representatives passed a comprehensive hate crimes bill on May 3. As the legislation moves to the Senate and the president, TIA will continue to work at the local and national level to enact this legislation.

The Rev. Dr. C. Welton Gaddy, president of The Interfaith Alliance, said to a Congressional briefing before the vote, “Unfortunately, a few religious voices, arrogantly and wrongly claiming to represent the view of all religious people, continue attempts to defeat hate crimes legislation.

“Their despicable language related to this bill should give away their motivation and identity as they rant and rave about the application of this legislation to ‘cross-dressers’ or as they raise the red herring of this bill criminalizing speech or thought. Let me be clear: this bill addresses vicious crimes and vicious criminals who act on their hate and terrorize entire communities.”

For the last decade, TIA has been working across the country and in Congress to pass meaningful hate crimes legislation, culminating in the recently introduced Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Prevention Act (LLEHCPA—H.R. 1592 in the House, S. 1105 in the Senate). This bill would strengthen existing hate crimes laws to ensure coverage for all Americans affected by hate violence, including the LGBT community. The bill also provides grants for state and local hate crime prevention programs and gives the federal government greater power to assist state and local authorities to properly investigate and prosecute hate crimes. It is important to note that this is not a “penalty-enhancement bill” that would increase jail time for hate crimes perpetrators.

Hate crimes continue to occur across the country, and too many people are victims of hate crimes, targeted because of who they are or what they believe, Rev. Gaddy said. In 2005, the FBI documented 7,163 hate crimes directed against institutions and individuals because of their race, religion, sexual orientation, national origin, or disability. And, according to a recent U.S. Department of Justice survey, more than 15 times as many hate crimes went unreported. But these statistics do not speak for themselves—because behind each of these incidents are individuals, families, and communities deeply impacted by these crimes.

Because hate crimes impact entire communities and must be thoroughly investigated, law enforcement groups, including the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Sheriffs’ Association, and many others, support the LLEHCPA. Additionally, TIA has again helped organize support from almost three
FROM THE PRESIDENT’S DESK

One Nation, Many Faiths. VOTE 2008
Save Religious Freedom, Revitalize Democracy

Dear Friends of The Interfaith Alliance,

This nation was founded on religious freedom, but politics disguised as religion has eroded our freedom and damaged religion. Real religion does not take away rights; it expands rights. Real religion does not dehumanize individuals, inspire hate, and incite violence. Real religion does not narrow life to a set of rules; it enhances life.

As host of State of Belief Radio, I have been surprised that we have as many secularist or atheist listeners as religious listeners. And they share most of the values that we promote in The Interfaith Alliance.

Whether you are religious or not, please join us and support our election year program: One Nation, Many Faiths. VOTE 2008. This election, already well under way, will determine the future direction of American foreign policy and domestic policy, the future of the religious liberty clauses in the Constitution, and who will sit on the Supreme Court and make decisions that affect our lives for generations.

We can do together what we can’t do alone. We must bond more closely, work more cooperatively, and not grow weary until we have made the political manipulation of religion and the sectarian manipulation of government so repugnant that the American public will tolerate such acts no longer.

When all of us come together—speaking in different tones of voice, from different regions, from different religious traditions or no religious tradition, but delivering the same message with the same passion—our communities will come to their senses and revitalize democracy.

Every day, I live motivated by the hope that comes by knowing people like you and the great work you are doing. Thanks for your support and for your inspiration.

Warm Regards,

Rev. Dr. C. Welton Gaddy
President

O ur laws reflect our values. A strong message about American values was sent in 1968 when the current federal hate crimes law was enacted during the civil rights era. Our hate crimes law needs to be updated to eliminate unnecessary obstacles to federal involvement and to cover all affected groups. The recently introduced Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Prevention Act (LLEHCPA—H.R. 1592 in the House, S. 1105 in the Senate) makes those legislative fixes.

Current law permits the involvement of federal law enforcement in investigating or prosecuting a hate crime only if the hate crime was motivated by bias based on race, color, religion, or national origin and the assailant intended to prevent the victim from exercising a “federally protected right,” such as the right to vote or attend school. Because the crime has to meet both requirements, these criteria substantially limit the likelihood of federal prosecution of hate crimes, even when the crime is particularly heinous and local law enforcement is unable or unwilling to prosecute it. The LLEHCPA would enhance the federal response to hate crime violence by covering all violent crimes based on race, color, religion, or national origin.

In addition, the LLEHCPA would permit federal involvement in the prosecution of bias-motivated crimes based on the victim’s gender, sexual orientation, or disability. This expansion is critical in order to protect members of these groups from this most egregious form of discrimination.

The special attention that these crimes require can stretch local law enforcement officials beyond their capacity. For example, the costly investigation of Matthew Shepard's murder in Wyoming—totaling over $150,000—forced the local sheriff's department to reduce its staff. Changes in federal policy could give local law enforcement the help they need to more effectively investigate and prosecute hate crimes.

Religious and democratic values call for equal protection for all people in all places. National hate crimes legislation will help ensure equal protection under the law for all Americans.

dozen diverse, national religious organizations, including Christians, Jews, Sikhs, Muslims, and many others, to support this legislation. We are also enlisting diverse clergy to support this legislation at www.clergyagainsthate.org. Please encourage religious leaders in your community to sign this online petition.

Unfortunately, religion continues to be misused as a tool to advance hate. At TIA, we are working tirelessly to ensure that every American enjoys the strongest possible guarantee of freedom from attacks motivated by bigotry. Please continue to respond to our action alerts, speak to your members of Congress, and tell them to “Legislate Against Hate by ’08”!

The Head Start Program Passes Congress WITHOUT Religious Discrimination

This “clean bill” (H.R. 1429) is a positive step towards safeguarding this vital and historic government program. TIA has consistently lobbied against allowing public funds to subsidize Head Start providers that fire or refuse to hire qualified teachers and volunteers solely because they are of a different faith tradition.

The Senate, in late June, passed the Head Start reauthorization by unanimous consent without any of the amendments sought by the religious right. The legislation now goes to conference to reconcile differences in the House and Senate bills and then on to the president. We urge the president to sign this important legislation.
The 2007 National Leadership Gathering in Denver, May 3-6, was a huge success with nearly 200 activists coming from as far away as Hawaii and the East Coast. An outstanding and diverse group of speakers and workshop leaders spurred members and new friends of The Interfaith Alliance to reenergize the fight for religious freedom, explore new ideas, renew friendships, and build new coalitions for ongoing and future initiatives.

On Thursday afternoon, the Rev. Dr. C. Welton Gaddy kicked off a rally on the steps of Denver’s city hall to “Legislate Against Hate by ’08”. The rally was keynoted by Denver Mayor John Hickenlooper. Dr. Gaddy announced to the crowd that earlier that day, the United States House of Representatives had passed a major hate crimes bill (see page one) and urged the Senate to pass the bill and the president to sign it into law.

Hosted by The Interfaith Alliance of Colorado and Senator Maureen McCormack, the four days of NLG included addresses by Colorado Governor Bill Ritter; the Rev. Dr. Amos C. Brown from San Francisco; TIA Board Chair Rabbi Jack Moline; the Rev. Dr. Bob Edgar, head of the National Council of Churches USA; and the Rev. Dr. Barry Lynn, executive director of Americans United for Separation of Church and State.

Party with a Purpose
First Freedom First introduces hottest summer trend since the backyard barbeque.

By Eric Shutt
First Freedom First Project Manager
eshutt@interfaithalliance.org

Are you looking for a way to celebrate America's religious freedom this summer? At The Interfaith Alliance Foundation, we're celebrating in style, nationwide.

Over the past year, we've worked with Americans United for Separation of Church and State to make First Freedom First so cool that summer heat just breezes by. We put First Freedom First in movie theaters and sent Go-Card post cards to hotspots in more than a dozen cities across America. We've gotten support from celebrities like Phil Donahue and political cartoonist Mike Keefe—not to mention Walter Cronkite.

But as global climate change makes the weather as unpredictable as the intersection of religion and politics, this summer, we'll need your help—party style.

We're asking people who support the separation of religion and government to bring First Freedom First to their friends and neighbors with a good, old-fashioned house party.

Featuring First Freedom First at your backyard barbeque can be as easy as passing around some stickers or buttons to wear when you head out for the parade. Or you can go big and make it a real celebration of religious liberty—our First Freedom. It's up to you.

We'll send you everything you'll need to tell people about First Freedom First—stickers, buttons, brochures, and petitions. And it's all free. All you need to do is ask.

If you'd like, after your event, you'll be able to get pictures from your party posted on a new upcoming section of the First Freedom First Web site highlighting all of the great things people like you are doing for First Freedom First in their local communities.

To host a house party or for more information, please contact Eric Shutt, at eshutt@interfaithalliance.org or 800.510.0969.
The Interfaith Alliance’s Voter Education Program

By Anne Sclater.
Deputy Director of Voter Education
asclater@interfaithalliance.org

The 2008 presidential election—already well under way in the first half of 2007—is shaping up to be a showcase for the issues addressed in The Interfaith Alliance’s One Nation, Many Faiths. VOTE 2008 program.

Religious frameworks have been used to discuss a variety of political issues, from the war in Iraq to the budget to the environment. No candidate has yet emerged as the clear favorite of the religious right, but some critics have focused on faith as a measure of a candidate. Candidates have been asked over and over again to detail and justify publicly a personal religious faith and practice.

The intensity and virulence of the public conversation reinforce the need for TIA’s election-related campaign to educate Americans about the proper role religion should play in elections. The Constitution and federal tax laws prohibit tax-exempt religious organizations from engaging in partisan politics. TIA further believes that mixing religion and government ultimately harms both.

Last year’s popular printed guides—one for candidates and one for houses of worship—are being updated for 2008. In addition, plans are underway for a more comprehensive internet Web presence for the VOTE 2008 program. The flexibility of Web publishing will make it easy for TIA to provide updated information about IRS rulings and other fast-changing election-related information.

Mixing of religion and politics happens not only at the national electoral level, but also in state and local races. Although the Democratic and Republican nominations for president will be decided earlier than ever in 2008, the shorter political season doesn’t usually begin in earnest until late summer or even Labor Day of an election year, so we expect another wave of public conversation about our issues to happen in mid-to-late 2008.

Though TIAs national staff lacks the manpower to follow every state and local race, we do hope to use this election year to establish an important dialogue with our members across the country. Look for more communications from us in upcoming months about how you can monitor political races in your area and let us know about inappropriate interactions between candidates and religious communities.

Three Great Ways to Support The Interfaith Alliance

#1 Take Up the Torch…Torchbearers are a very special group of members who make automatic monthly payments on their debit card or credit card or through their checking account (EFT) to support our work. As a Torchbearer, you control how much you contribute and when to begin and end your monthly donations. Plus, you’ll never have to worry about renewing your membership or keeping track of when you last sent a gift by mail. And because these reliable funds sustain our work throughout the fiscal year, you can rest assured that your secure monthly gifts make our programs to protect religious freedom and to challenge religious political extremism stronger and more effective. To sign up or learn more, please e-mail monthlygiving@interfaithalliance.org, or call 800.856.0277 today.

#2 Upgrade to the Faith & Freedom Society…A distinguished group of our most dedicated supporters, Faith & Freedom Society members provide the extraordinary support that helps us educate members of Congress and all Americans on our religious freedoms. Faith & Freedom Society members make annual gifts of $500 or more. For a list of benefits and different levels of support, please visit www.interfaithalliance.org.

#3 Leave a Legacy…In 2005, former TIA Board Chair Rev. Dr. Gwynne Guibord and her partner, Dr. Lo Sprague (left), made the first, and very generous, bequest of $100,000 to The Interfaith Alliance Foundation. Since then, the Walter Cronkite Legacy Society has continued to grow and thrive. We accept restricted and unrestricted gifts of a specific dollar amount or a percentage of your estate; the remainder of your estate after all debts, expenses, taxes, and other bequests have been made; or a contingent bequest if one or more of your beneficiaries does not survive you. Your bequest may include cash, stocks, bonds, life insurance policies, or other planned gift arrangements. For more information on the Walter Cronkite Legacy Society, please contact plannedgiving@interfaithalliance.org, or call Julianne Simitz, deputy director of development, at 800.510.0969.

Calling High School Students for LEADD Camp 2007

By Denise Davidoff, Director of LEADD
ddavidoff@interfaithalliance.org

The Interfaith Alliance Foundation invites high school sophomores and juniors to apply for the second annual LEADD Camp (Leadership Education Advancing Democracy and Diversity), which runs from August 5-12 at the Pearlstone Conference Center in Reistertown, Maryland. Last year’s inaugural “LEADDers” said the camp was a life-changing experience. An academic assessment team from the University of Georgia judged the first camp a great success.

“We did so many things together, like the trust walk last night or the power of the mountain and the low ropes,” one student said. “We’re a group of 30 really diverse kids from all around the country, [who] came together because of the things we did.”

LEADD teaches students how to become informed and engaged citizens, successfully advocating for religious freedom. We intentionally choose our student campers to ensure the camp is radically diverse in terms of faith traditions, geography, and economic conditions. LEADDers come together to experience pluralism, share information, teach and be taught, and have fun in a safe and nurturing environment that encourages openness and builds confidence.

Another student said, “I feel that I have a lot more power and support behind me. I want to be more involved than I used to be, and that’s a big deal. I’m really thankful for LEADD giving me this.”

LEADD faculty members are college and high school teachers, supplemented by staff from The Interfaith Alliance Foundation, whose specialties are public policy, advocacy, messaging, and communications. Experienced camp counselors chaperone activities and oversee the nonacademic side of LEADD, from campfires to volleyball and other outdoor adventures.

This summer, LEADDers will take a one-day field trip to nearby Washington, DC, to visit the Jefferson Memorial, National Archives, and Smithsonian Institution. They will also tour the Capitol and meet with congressional staff members to learn about lobbying and advocacy firsthand.

“I’ve always wanted to be active, but I never thought that just one person could influence so many others,” another LEADDer said.

Rising high school sophomores and juniors from all religious traditions, as well as any who are not religious, are encouraged to apply.

To apply for the 2007 LEADD program, go online at www.WeLEADD.org, or call 800.510.0969.
